Janet Rogers is an artist working mainly in stained, leaded and kiln fused glass to commission. Her designs combine traditional craftsmen's techniques with bold modern designs to produce vibrant works with a contemporary feel.

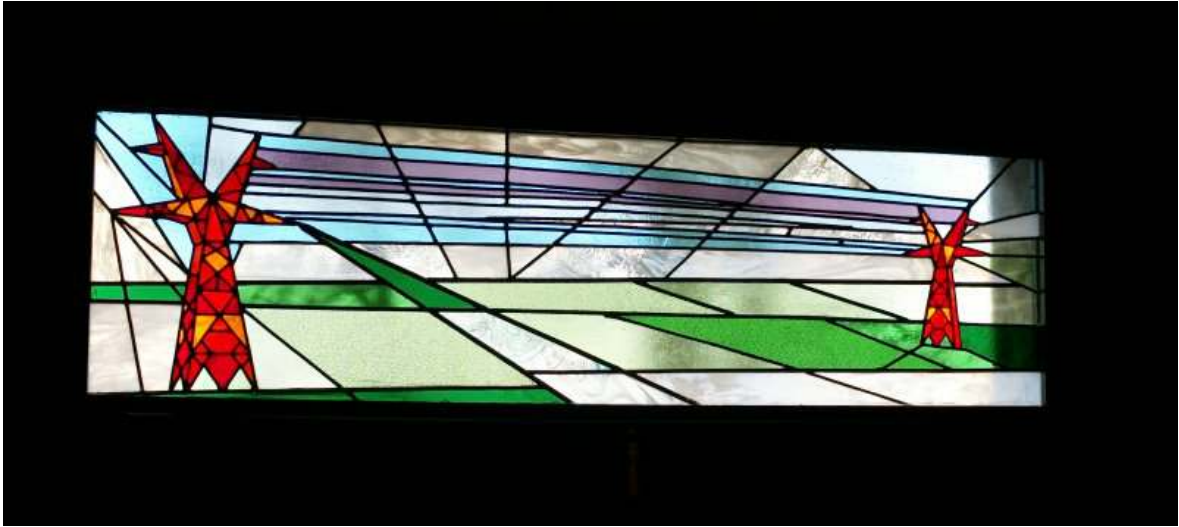

Born in Gateshead, Janet now lives and has a workshop in Durham where she produces her own fused and etched glass pieces that are often incorporated into leaded stained glass panels. She works full time designing and producing commissions for domestic and commercial projects around the UK.

"My work consists of many visual forms with references from landscape, geometry and colour. The majority of designs involve bright, vivid, bold colour and texture to make my pieces stand out against the minimalist colour palette of today. Artists which have inspired my work are Andy Warhol and Damien Hurst who both use different colours and tones, not to compliment each other or generate a specific mood to a piece but simply to create a statement and engage the viewers sensual mind."
